

RUSSIAN COUNTS VISIT SALT LAKE WHILE ON TRIP AROUND THE WORLD

Count Paul Gorske.

Count Paul Gorske and Count Gottlieb Korolenko, two Russian noblemen and writers of considerable repute, are visitors in Salt Lake. They will remain here about two weeks, during which time they will study the irrigation methods of the state and incidentally take in the various places of interest in and about the city.

Count Gorske enjoys the friendship of Count Leo Tolstoi, the great Russian writer, and speaks highly of the great nobility of character of this greatest of all Russian literary men.

"I have visited Count Tolstoi's large farm several times. He is loved by the Russian people, and not without good cause. Simple in his habits and unassuming in manner, he is a man easily approached and one in whom it would be natural to place confidence.

"At one time he sold his large landed estate, but his wife didn't like the idea. 'What will you do now?' she asked. 'How about the many people you gave employment at better wages than they could get elsewhere?' In response to her plea he again acquired a number of big farms in various parts of Russia.

At the present time Count Tolstoi is perhaps the richest land owner outside of the czar, of course, in all Russia."

Has Big Farm.

Count Gorske is one of the Russian farmer counts. He owns a farm of about 50,000 acres and makes his residence in the nearest large city, Pultava. Seven years ago he introduced irrigation on the farm, and now it yields prolifically in potatoes, barley, wheat, oats and fruit.

On this estate he employs about ninety men and their families the year around. The farm laborers occupy houses on the farm and are provided for by the owner. In addition to board and lodging, the men get eighteen roubles, equal to about $3, a month. The women, who do the milking and lighter work, get ten roubles a month.

Count Gorske's brother, known as Count Korolenko because of the fact that two in the same family can not be known by the same title name, is a Russian officer in the cadet corps.

In illustration of the advance of twentieth century civilization, the out-of-way rural districts of Russian territory, Count Gorske tells of an incident happening that befell him and his brother while on a hunting trip in Russian Siberia.

Treed by Wolves.

After outfitting at a small city near the Siberian border, they started out into the timber country in a hunt for wolves, bear and deer. They had sufficient experience in this line to do them for some time, for they were kept treed for three days by a howling pack of wolves. By discharging their firearms they were able finally to scare the wolves away. On getting down from their perch in the trees they made their way to a distant farm house. On arriving there they were given food and made as comfortable as the limited conveniences of the house would permit.

After finishing their meal they lighted their cigarettes and the host was amazed at the burst of flame that came from the end of the small stick of wood. It was beyond his comprehension. He had lived in this out-of-way place all his life, and during all those years had used the flint and steel method for making fires.

Several years before this time the railroad had penetrated the vast expanse of territory, within a day's drive of his farm, but he had never seen the two shining bands of steel and had never set eyes on a railroad train in his life.

From here Count Gorske and Count Korolenko will go to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition at Seattle and may return to Salt Lake before leaving westward for a trip around the world and to their home in Russia. Count Gorske is greatly impressed with Salt Lake, and stated yesterday that if he could find a farm of several thousand acres that appealed to him he might come to this state to make his residence.

DIRECT NOMINATIONS ARE GREAT GOLD BRICK

New York Legislator Reports on Evils of Primary Election System in Middle West.

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 30.—Direct nominations as we have seen them make the greatest gold brick that was ever handed to a confiding people, was the declaration here today by Assemblyman Robert J. Conklin of New York City, a member of the special legislation committee appointed to investigate direct primaries.

"The people of New York state," he said, "have no idea of the political anarchy that exists in the middle western states. Direct nominations have driven parties entirely out of existence in many communities."

"In Wisconsin there is no longer a Republican party and a Democratic party. There are several factions, the most prominent of which are the stalwarts and the half-breeds. The latter are the followers of LaFollette and the former are his opponents. Those who were at one time Democrats have disappeared and gave gone into the Republican party, so-called, to vote at the primaries. There are no longer party principles, but only personal views of faction leaders."

"To some extent this same state of affairs exists in Iowa and Kansas."

"Time and again we met with the expression from the biggest men in the cities we visited: 'For God's sake don't inflict this iniquity on the state of New York.'"
